My dear Friend - It gave me great pleasure to receive a letter from you this morning and have only to regret my want of time to make a suitable response to it.
Believe me I need no assurance to satisfy me that you are both interested in me and my mission to this land - I am well and yet it gave me great pleasure to receive the assurance to work and be ~~worth~~^{well} and fresh from your hand and pen.

I was somewhat dissatisfied with my visit to Washington because of the confusion attending the proceedings of the meeting - and I was somewhat fearful that the meeting would not be attended with desirable results - I am therefore glad that while I may have suffered in the opinion of some the Cambridge has suffered no real injury by my visit.

I am writing you with so much speed as hardly to know if I am or am not expressing myself properly. I am to visit the North again in a few days and if it should be throughly desirable - I will speak again in Barnington - but do not I beseech you make yourself. In no way expose your health.

I long to see you well, and able again to bless humanity with your pen and voice. You may tell your Brother with my love to keep the money for the books till he hears from me. I am
